Dear [NAME OF HIRING MANAGER],

I am a recent animation graduate from the University of the Arts London looking for new experiences outside of an academic setting. With approximately five years of self-teaching myself 2D animation, I would love to bring these skills to your team and in return, refine them through a position as a Character Designer at your studio.

One of my biggest strengths is my ability to deliver high-quality work within the timeframe I have been given, as I am constantly striving for excellence in my professional work. I am also confident in working in groups where I can collaborate my ideas with others, guiding colleagues when I can and asking for help where it is required.

My technical skills include being well-practised in Adobe Photoshop, the software I use most often for character turnarounds. Outside of designing characters, I also use Toon Boom Harmony for animating, Adobe Premiere Pro and After Effects for compositing, with over ten years of experience using Adobe software for my work.

I greatly admire [STUDIO'S NAME] devotion to keeping digital 2D animation alive, an approach that is not used as much in the industry anymore - as well as portraying original stories that are seldom shown in mainstream media. Bringing my enthusiasm for stories usually left untold and my love for creating charming character designs would be a great asset to [STUDIO NAME], where I can collaborate with like-minded individuals with as much of a passion for storytelling as myself.

As an eager learner, working alongside industry professionals would be a cherished experience, additionally improving my prowess as a junior character designer! Attached below is my showreel, as well as my portfolio website if you consider my application.
